A very old temple stood in the jungle. Nobody lived there. There were only tigers and snakes and bats.

They read about the temple in a book. A rich king hid all his gold and silver, his crown and his sword under this temple. These people wanted to get the King's gold.

They fought with a tiger in the jungle. They killed the tiger. They also killed many snakes.

At last, one evening they reached the temple, and it started to rain. Soon there was water everywhere*.

They tried to enter the temple, but they could not open the heavy door. One man banged his fists* on it.

The second man hit the door with the hammer. The third man kicked it with his rubber shoes.

Then there came a low whisper from inside, "Who's there?" And the people outside said, "Please let us in.

We are all wet."

There was no answer, but they could hear the whistle of the wind. Then the door opened. Inside there was candle light.

"We have supper ready for you there on the table," a voice said from one corner. "Then you can sleep. You will feel better in the morning."

An old man walked out of the corner. He waited on* them and poured wine for them. They soon fell asleep.

They woke up early the next morning. They felt cold.

The trees were around and above them. There was no temple.
