Once there was a very rich king. His name was Midas. He was leader of a rich country. In his palace there were many dancers, singers, actors, and writers. But they did not make him happy.

There were only two things he loved. He loved his little daughter, and he loved gold.

He kept all his gold in a dark strong* room. And he went to this dark strong room every day to count his gold.

One day a young man came to see him. The rich king was counting his gold coins. "I am here to give you a wish*," said the young visitor. "What is your wish? Tell me."

"This is my wish. Everything I touch will become gold," King Midas answered quickly. The visitor smiled and said, "You will have your wish." Then he went away.

King Midas did not believe the young visitor. "I don't believe him," he said to himself. Then he walked out into the garden. There were roses in every colour. The rich ruler of the land stopped to smell a pink rose. Then he touched its soft petals*.

Then his eyes opened wide. The beautiful pink flower was quickly becoming gold. It was shining and it was hard*. The King was very glad.

He touched another* rose. It changed to gold, too.
"How wonderful*!" he thought. "I am the owner of these gold roses. The giver of my wish was a wonderful man. I think he is the ruler of heaven."

"I must go and tell my darling daughter. But first I must put these gold roses in my dark room. There are many robbers."

So King Midas entered the palace. The princess was reading a book. Her teacher was listening to her. She was a good learner.

The King said, "Come here, my little princess." The little princess looked up. She smiled at her father.

"Look at this," the King said. He touched a mirror. It changed to gold.

The princess was very happy. "Oh how clever*!" she shouted and put her arms around his neck. "Father, you are won....." But the princess did not finish her words.

The King looked at her and he cried loudly.

His daughter was all gold.
